CRASHING THE INFORMATION IN 48 HOURS

Convert yourself into E-waste, ferment yourself, chase honeybees for weather report, launch fungi to outdoorspace, send your mobile on a slow boat to China, set your electric sheep free range, grow your android plants, tune in to ghostradio, stream in the orchestra, piss off to compute, eat your data raw, read your pulse loud, make your own beer, make love to your tattoo, hand over your hangover, take a dip in the Danube, check into the underwater eel hotel, admit yourself to a world without compromise, a world in which dreams great reality and technology is treated with great caution.

In 2015, Stadtwerkstatt, the nerve center of Linz' free/open culture takes up „the nature of information“ as a matter of inquiry and launches Information LAB to house its many ongoing information research projects. For Stadtwerkstatt which always presents a reference to the established system, an information laboratory is a challenge of the presence. While the world of natural sciences updates and releases information through logical conclusions, the information LAB retrieves seemingly meaningless information data without seeking conclusive arguments: it is about the interplay between reality and information, about the observation of observation, talking in contingency randomness in the process of encoding unique information, looking deeper into concepts of decision-making and conclusion.

From Stadtwerkstatt cultural space to Am Winterhafen where Messschiff Eleonore is anchored, along the Danube, cross the continents, STWST48 - crashing the information in 48 hours - brings together events/non-events, information/non-information, hack/fab labs, reality/dreams, unfiltered/raw/random/med/cooked/processed infodata. The 48 hour programs are organized under the four headlines – infOLAB, infODETOX, infOCRASH and Nightline's CRASH THE FUTURE.
